Jacob Funk Kirkegaard

Senior Associate, Rhodium Group

Senior Fellow, Peterson Institute for International Economics

Jacob Funk Kirkegaard is a senior associate at the Rhodium Group (RHG) and leads the firm's advanced economies analysis. RHG combines policy experience, quantitative economic tools and on-the-ground research to analyze disruptive global trends. Mr. Kirkegaard is also a senior fellow at the Peterson Institute for International Economics, where he focuses on structural economic reform issues in Europe and other OECD countries, pension and healthcare systems, labor market developments, demographic trends, immigration policy, foreign direct investments and the productivity impacts of information technology.

Mr. Kirkegaard is the author or co-author of Transforming the European Economy (2004), Accelerating the Globalization of America: The Role for Information Technology (2006), The Accelerating Decline in America's High-Skilled Workforce: Implications for Immigration Policy (2007) and US Pension Reform: Lessons from Other Countries (2009), as well as numerous Peterson Institute Policy Briefs and Working Papers and other articles in academic journals and media outlets.

He speaks frequently on European and OECD country structural economic issues at the Peterson Institute, other Washington, DC think tanks, the IMF, the European Commission and various academic and private institutions. He has testified before the US Senate, the US House of Representatives and the European Parliament.
